The distribution of yellow fever vaccine to people older than 9 years is not recommended, and pregnant women should not be vaccinated against yellow fever. Elsevier journal, Neuroendocrinology, 2010, 21(10), 1425-1432. doi:10.1111/j.1365-2958.2010.17873.x. The aim of this study was to report the usefulness of the novel medication regimen of prednisolone with cilostazol in Japanese patients with multiple sclerosis (MS). The use of this method was approved by the ethics committee of the university hospital where we work, and was performed with informed consent. We included five patients with a relapsing-remitting course of MS. In this report, we describe the efficacy of the novel method and the results of assessment of pharmacokinetics. Other than the starting dosage of prednisolone, the treatment regimen consisted of the same medications as in usual care. The patients began to receive a continuous oral intake of prednisolone and a subcutaneous injection of cilostazol (Pletal®, PTC) from 20 days before initiation of a new cycle of the medication until about 8 days after the discontinuation of the treatment. Thereafter, the patients underwent evaluations at days 1, 2, 7, 14, 30, 60, and 90. The serum levels of prednisolone, a fatty-acid derivative of cilostazol (CZ), and CZ were assessed. The patients were also evaluated with regard to their quality of life and the severity of visual impairment. The starting dosage of prednisolone (PD) was 0.1 mg/kg/day, and the maximum dosage of PD was 3.0 mg/kg/day. The starting dosage of cilostazol (CZ) was 100 mg/day, and the maximum dosage of CZ was 500 mg/day. After 7 days of treatment, there were no or only slight changes in the scores for the MSFC, the Kurtzke EDSS, and the Stroop Color Word Test. Following the treatment, the fatigue and pain were significantly improved, and the scores on the pain visual analog scale (VAS) and the PPS were significantly improved. The serum CZ levels were as low as 0.17 mg/l on day 1 and the serum PD levels were as high as 26.8 mg/l on day 1. On day 2, the serum CZ levels were as high as 3.22 mg/l and the serum PD levels were as low as 1.15 mg/l. On day 7,
